During a blistering 1903 summer, Portland's steam laundry women are working ten hellish hours a day. Exhausted and ill, they demand a nine hour workday. Sage Adair, and his mother, Mae, join their fight until the women begin disappearing. Desperately searching for the missing women, Sage and Mae encounter grave dangers midst suffragettes, prostitutes, social workers, white slavers, arsonists and sweatshop bosses. Inspired by actual historical events and told from a progressive's viewpoint, this is the sixth book in the award-winning Sage Adair mystery series.
