Okay, so maybe I jumped the fence thinking that things would be better over here. That not only would the grass be greener, but that there just might be a single parent amusement park with a secret spa in the back. That, like Ann Romano, I would skip through single motherhood with grace and resolve, sporting a flashy ensemble and perfectly coiffed hair with my three well-behaved children in tow. But the truth is that sometimes I wear my pajamas in public, get fruit snacks stuck in my hair and untangle my brawling children at the public library. FYI, Sometimes There's No Grass.
